[Note. This film session is part II of a sequence. Part 1 is a regular session (73, 10:15 am)), Farm or Pharm: Marijuana as Medicine.]

organizer & film director, Ann Alter, Humboldt State Univ.

Voices from the inside discuss the practices and issues involved in distributing medical cannabis. Of the 12 states in 2006 that permit medical cannabis use, California is the only state that allows for distribution of the medicine. How and where do people get their medicine? How does one insure that their medicine is clean, safe and of sufficient quality? Dispensing Cannabis travels to five unique medical cannabis dispensaries. Tours of ACT UP San Francisco and the San Francisco Patients Cooperative show the variety that exists within retail model dispensaries. Humboldt Patient Resource Center of Arcata gives us an unprecedented look at a clinic style dispensary with an in-house organic garden. On the eastern side of the state we visit the Tehama Health Collective where caregiver Jason Browne explains their operation. In Santa Cruz we meet Valerie and Michael Corral and the Wo/Men's Alliance for Medical Marijuana (WAMM), a unique community of chronically and terminally ill people brought together by their shared need for cannabis.

114) Presidential Workshop: Information Literacy: The Partnership of Sociology Faculty & Social Science Librarians

organizer: Edward L Kain, Southwestern Univ., [What kind of research skills should sociology majors possess as they investigate the secondary literature on a topic, write a research proposal or a term paper, and interpret the content of scholarly articles? At what stage of their sociology education – and in what ways – can research and information skills be incorporated into the curriculum? How are students' information skills to be assessed within the framework of the recommendations by the ASA Task Force on the Undergraduate Major?

Information literacy is an aspect of critical thinking in sociology. Faculty and social science librarians can find common ground on this point and creatively collaborate so that students are not left to their own devices to find and evaluate appropriate sources of information and use data and other resources effectively and ethically. In this workshop, experienced sociology faculty and librarians will introduce the Information Literacy Standards for sociology. They will present strategies, techniques, and examples for designing and modifying assignments, curricula, and assessments that will help students meet the standards and become more savvy researchers. The workshop will emphasize ways for faculty and librarians who specialize in sociology or social science to collaborate and to develop assessable, information-rich coursework that is embedded strategically in the major curriculum]
